

Starting to type a bit, after a long time, idk how it feels listening to some classical indian music but this is worth a shot considering how intertwined shit has become lately. Procrastination has been literal peak, zero productivity lately, endless hours of reel scrolling and idk what else. Coming week, planning to change things up a bit, starting with social media, which i am planning to block. Came accross this app called minimalist which is able to control my usage much but has certain loopholes, addressing which is my first concern, maybe mail to the minimalist software.

the problem, well the interface is pretty non distracting thats for sure but the problem lies once the user tries to remove apps from the background. idk about other phones but on my samsung device when i try to remove certain apps from the background then the logos of the most recent apps appear in the bottom, and voila i find my most distracting app and is obliged to click on it. Now the blocking function can close it after a certain delay which is appreciated but the controlled usage option takes a hit, especially after it closes and i tend to close it from the background and end up seeing the logo and trying to click and open it again, maybe a feature to disable app remove from the background and simply using an option to remove it all without having to open the drawer can do wonders.

the second issue is with the notification bar, so i am using an productive app and a notification about X comes, i just see the notification and if i try to expand the notification then the timer alert comes, to close the app (which i suppose is talking about X) but unknowingly it also closes my current app as well. Yes till now two bugs, using it for a month and this is all i found. It has a cost associated with it, but thats normal.

Coming to this jargon of typig freely, i think next time i should do it without listening to music, idk why but seems like its blocking some of my thought flow during this process. noted. what next? probably today night or tomorrow i will plan shit out. i will start from very basic stuff, probably starting off by cleaning my macbook. what next, the music is blocking the thoughts aaaaa.....nvm i can type the keywords: blogs (my own site and reproducible for others, idk if anyone can understand this but you can say an extension of the freewrite). what next? starting my gate exam studies. noted. Whats next? Completing pending projects, starting of writing paper for a completed project, more once i clear up music infested mind a bit.

Its my first few minutes and i am already starting to like this idea. no need to be formal and stuff, its not a journal, not. blog, idgaf who reads it , end of the day its going to me to probably plan shit and move forward seeing the workflow. there is going to be plenty of grammer, spelling mistakes, some to silly but hey atleast there is a rough idea of what lies ahead. Again, honestly I dont know how will i move forward with this, what is the future or if i might stop in between and leave everything altogether. nothing is certain. life isnt certin. fuck it.