

alright 15 minutes. now i am not specifically bound to this time but no harm in following the freewrite rules, 15 minutes, brainstorm shit, times up.

this time i am not listening to any music, my ears are open and i will direct every bit of thing going around planning developing stuff through the coming weeks here. starting with application development.

look there are multiple places where you can write and distribute blogs, even create your own page, which is nice and cool. but i wanna take this a bit differently. now i don't know if it exists, but it probably should given i am not following internet and stuff writing this freely, but most of the blog spaces are congested. and most importantly formalised. now imagine a platform where there is literally no one. just you, your blogs. target audience, your friends. or different set of people given your preference. main thing is that it is not going to be a comprehensive platform. it's one static site. open sourced on github, clone, upload your daily freetype pdf in it, pictures if any or maybe even videos and done. no editing no formatting no spellchecks (thanks farza for the inspiration), its just you being you, and just you. so why just not type in word or freewrite? i like freetype but i feel it can be expanded to a fact where atleast people see, for me they are my closeset friends, for others it may be different. i even dont know how much people will even like it, like bro there are places where you can run this idea so why taking an extra step to make an application? idk. its just me probably atp. but i think it can help people. sharing “some” of your thought and plans and daily stuff with others you know or care. not everything, some shits are personal, keep it to yourself. but there can be other things you can write without the fear of a large audience. look you are not inspiring anyone, you are just spamming and venting some of your thoughts and jargons to your friends, who can read if they like or just ignore. what if you need to see yourself in words? not everytime your laptops be with you to skim through that pages, and your are definitely not writing shit on mobile devices.

okay confusing so here is the thing, a static application, storing your freewrites in a nice format so you can access it, add some plugins (idk its just a far fetched idea at this point), share with people, asking them to subscribe OK ITS GETTING SIMILAR TO THE BLOG but the difference being only people you want to subscribe will be your audience. this blog app (ok now even i have said it) is only for you, your ppl and thats it. an application where you can freely vent and upload.

no user database. just you, your blog link, and people you want it to see. thats summed up. your own blog page. wait you can do that as well. i think shit like that exists. again, this thing might be a tad different, idk how, idk when. the only thing i know is i will build this shit up next week, dead simple and launch. probably no one will use it. probably its only me. or a guy i know will use, or someone i might never expect.

ok thats it my idea for a different type of freewrite application, farza did a crazy job building this application where i can freely express anything. its just me wanting to make it an application in this awesome theme for everyone. sums it up.

or not. idk. idgaf. will start building.